NAN OF THE NORTH

SYNOPSIS:

"Facing Death At Sea"

EPISODE NO. 13

Nan is hurled into the water by the explosion of the motorboat, but is quickly rescued by Driscoll and Gaspard. Reaching shore, the three decide to rest a while and then resume their journey to the coast.

Peralo and Vane, swimming to shore, join Hays and his outlaws, and all go on ahead towards the coast.

Coming to a trading village on the coast of British Columbia, Hays and his men by a ruse overpower the crew of a coastwise ship, knowing that Nan and the others will board this boat for Vancouver. Igloo sees this act of piracy, notifies the villagers, but not until the boat, with Nan and the others on it, has set out to sea.

Hays now discloses himself to Nan, Driscoll and Gaspard and forces Driscoll to give up the two vials of titano. Then he tells the three that this must be their end, that he intends to set the boat on fire and then run it on the rocky coast to destruction. But Hays now discovers not only has the crew escaped from the hold where he had thrown them, but that a faster armed boat is following. This boat, loaded with the angry villagers gives them a warning shot to stop, but when they fail to do so, sends another shot that makes a direct hit.

Hays and his men leave in one of the ship's small boats, with Nan, Driscoll and Gaspard helpless in the cabin, the water rushing in upon them from the hole caused by the cannon shot.
